BACKGROUND:

For four generations, the Gustafson family has been building homes and buildings throughout the Midwest. The tradition continues with Stonewood, now led by J. Sven Gustafson, who grew up learning the trade from his dad. "I thought of my father as an artist, on a large scale, and knew I wanted to follow in his footsteps," he says. Today he works with all of Stonewood's clients assisting in architect interviews, aiding in the selection of building sites, and overseeing the projects throughout construction. His professional and highly trained team builds to the highest of standards, taking on only a few projects every year.

AN INNOVATIVE STAFF:

Many of our project managers have owned and operated custom homebuilding businesses and have extensive experience in the field. We understand that detailed planning and solid practices result in consistently happy clients and successful projects. We're innovators and strive to incorporate the latest proven technologies into our homes, as well as into the building process. When we couldn't find software to manage our building process, we created it ourselves. We now sell it to builders in over 18 countries.

CHALLENGING STEREOTYPES:

A big misconception about building a home is that it's going to be a stressful experience, behind-schedule and over-budget. This is the result of flawed processes and poor planning. We spend ample time upfront, pre-construction, to avoid these issues. With proper planning, building your dream home should be a fun, enjoyable process.
